[redacted] there was a USSR governmental project under way to send a large number of Soviet university graduates to attend Chinese universities and institutes in order to become familiar with the country and its way of life, eventually to assimilate themselves completely with the native population, and to take various positions in the Chinese economy and other fields of Chinese national life. 25X1

2. [redacted] several former graduates of the Foreign Trade Institute had already left Moscow for China. Prior to their departure they were briefed at the Ministry of Foreign Trade and informed that they would probably have to remain in China for practically the rest of their lives. They were instructed to develop friendly relations with their Chinese classmates and to insert themselves into the present Chinese society. Candidates for this project had to possess a knowledge of either English or Chinese. 25X1
